1. Lead-in-From Customer Needs to Solutions

5-10 minutes

Start by connecting this lesson directly to the previous one.

The teacher ask:

Why is it important to understand the customer's needs first?

What information did we look for during a discovery call?

How can you use that information when presenting a product?

What's the difference between a feature and a benefit?

Should you talk about every feature of your product?

How can you make a presentation relevant to the customer?

A Solution for TechPro

Emma is a Sales Executive at TechSolutions. Last week, she had a discovery call with Michael, the Operations Director of a logistics company.

Michael explained that his company was using two different systems. The systems were not well connected, so employees had to enter the same information more than once. The company wanted to save time, reduce errors, and improve communication.

Today, Emma is presenting a solution to Michael and his team.

Emma: Thanks for joining today's presentation. Based on our previous conversation, I'd like to show you a solution that could help you improve your operations.

Michael: Great. We're interested in seeing how it works.

Emma: Let's start with one of your main challenges: entering the same information more than once. Our platform allows your teams to share information automatically between different departments.

Michael: That sounds useful.

Emma: One of the key features is our integration system. It connects with the software you're already using, so you don't need to replace everything.

Michael: That's important for us because we don't want to change our entire system.

Emma: Exactly. The main benefit is that your employees can access the same information without entering it again. This can save time and reduce errors.

Michael: What about communication between teams?

Emma: The platform also includes a shared dashboard. Everyone can see updated information in one place. This means your sales, operations, and customer service teams can work with the same data.

Michael: That could definitely improve communication.

Emma: Another benefit is the reporting function. The system automatically creates reports, so managers don't need to collect information manually.

Michael: How easy is it to use?

Emma: The platform has a simple, user-friendly interface. We also provide training and customer support during implementation.

Michael: That's good to know.

Emma: Based on your needs, I'd recommend starting with our Professional Package. It includes the integration system, shared dashboard, automatic reporting, training, and customer support.

Michael: It sounds like a good fit for us.

Emma: Great. I'd be happy to arrange a demonstration so your team can see the platform in action.
